

Compulsory labelling of bee hives

December 2020, Primefact 1677, Second edition

Plant Biosecurity and Product Integrity

Registration

Under the Biosecurity Act 2015 beekeeping in New South Wales requires all people that own a hive, or several, to register with the Department of Primary Industries (NSW DPI). The registration system allows owners of beehives to be contacted about:

- emergency situations
- surrounding threats
- beekeeping biosecurity
- training services

Your unique hive brand

When you register your hive(s) with NSW DPI you must also register a unique hive brand to identify you as a beekeeper and hives that belong to you.

Hive brands must be unique to your registration. You may have multiple unique brands listed on one registration. You may contact the Licensing Team on 02 6552 3000 or bfs.admin@dpi.nsw.gov.au to check if a brand is available.

Display

Beekeepers are required to display their registration number (also known as a hive brand number) on each hive so that it is clearly legible at all times. NSW DPI do not prescribe the method of labelling, however it is important the number can withstand all weather conditions. Some methods include painting, routing, or branding with a hot iron.

Things to take into consideration:

- Is material of the hive going to adhere with my application choice?
- Will my choice of application withstand rain, dust and direct sunlight?

Position

The positioning of the registration number needs to be easily accessible, visible and easy to read. The registration number is to be placed on the hive body. The best location for the registration number is on the front of the brood box so that even when supers are removed, the hive remains clearly marked.

Importance

Visible registration numbers are significant for the health and safety of your bees.

Registration numbers allow Authorised Officers to:

- Alert you of pests and diseases that threaten your hives
- Contact you in the case of a bushfire threat
- Keep you up to date with biosecurity training
- Inform you of biosecurity issues
